Recent Lindenwood graduate is Monroe teacher

Mrs. Doyle B. Rogers, a teacher this year in Monroe Elementary School, is shown here with her ten children and her husband following her graduation in June from Lindenwood College. She credits her successful completion of college to her husband and children. "I would never have been able to complete my work if it hadn't been for their help," she says.

The children also were thrilled that their one-teacher school was to have a college. "The children also were thrilled that we were going to college," Mrs. Rogers said. "I'm glad we have a school and we're going to do something about it." The parents also were pleased. "We're glad to have a college here," they said.

The Rogers have a 10 acre farm and have been living with their children in the morning to get all the chores done. Her husband, who works at McDonnell Aircraft, changed the night shift so they wouldn't have to have a baby sitter.

"He encouraged me," she recalls, "because he knew that in addition to the security my having a degree would give us, it also enabled me to enjoy some of the intellectual stimulation that had been cut off from us for so many years."
