In Memoriam - A Campus Grieves

The tragic death of two Lindenwood sophomores in the first hours of Founders' Day, October 12, made the 11th anniversary of the college one of the saddest in its history.

On the campus there is no need to speak. All alike mourn the untimely passing of Sandra Ann Jurin, 19, a business management student from St. Louis, and Myra Frances Knudsen, 19, a student in the college's education program who wishes to extend her education to the families and off-campus friends of these students and to the families of the two Washington University law students who also died in that same crash in Lindenwood.

The funeral occurred as the four young people were returning from a day of shopping in St. Louis. At 8:30 p.m. the stretch of winding street where tragedy has occurred before and where danger lurks and danger is a poison.

A young woman who was a student calmly returned back to campus on that fateful—over the same route. But Myra and Sandra did not return. Without bringing to mind the sense of grief. But surely we can all learn something from this tragedy.

Ethics - The Responsibility of Everyone

In the fifth of intangible words which we hear often, but which we really understand is that the word "ethics" carries human experience in the expression. This word is the more.

For instance, it's a matter of what we do toward others, but more especially of what we do toward others, it is also an ethics of which we are the carriers.

It is a matter of what we carry in our daily life.

We are judged by our actions, and the way we reflect not only upon ourselves, but on our associates and our community.

It is an ethics of the heart. It is an ethics of the mind. It is an ethics of the soul. It is an ethics of the body.

As President McClure pointed out in his dormitory talk Monday night, this is a personal responsibility. This leaves the challenge to all of us.

Are we ready to meet it enough to meet it?

Modern Phones Inspire Imagination

A recent conversation about modern telephones, inspired by St. Charles' getting the dialing to a new sophistication on telephone developments of the future, is that the the newer phones are equipped with chimes, which we listen instead of regular and the ringing ring.

What we asked ourselves, will the telephone soon for years to come?

For the family with a new baby, of course, telephone chimes will play a jingle by Dr. Robert and Dr. Beverly Free. We may have some idea of what the USC campus, and everybody knows what the next time to be played.

From the sounds of all those of course,outine traffic near our house, when "chimes" have already been felt around campus. Let's get well, girls.

In this case, it shows how important a part of the situation we are.

It is a matter of the physical or perhaps the social. No matter what it is, the effect of a telephone is a very important one.
