What Is So Rare As A Day

By Jean Robb

Aging the opinion of L.E. C. girls on the question of what they want in a roommate proved to be a most uplifting experience! The clever little girl thought readily and finally said, "Well, she should have clothes my size, a couple of good-looking brothers, a car off campus, love to house-clean, adore rolling up my hair, a good cook at home who sends cookies, cakes, and other garbage, and a loan to do my homework.

A few of the more serious said they felt the most important characteristic of a good roommate is consideration. The ideal roommate seems to be one who is considerate about lights, radio, and use of room, respects personal property and privacy, is helpful, keeps a neat room, and can cook meals well. Gendron prosecuting attorneys, "smoke as deep as the dark gray smoke, no food, and no one to talk to."
